Land your letter only reached me to-day.

My dear Joe,

I was delighted to hear your news. Sorry for the delay in answering - as you see, I have just removed, h I have one copy of Monsieur Joseph, the one returned from Hutchinsons. But it is still in London, in the flat, as I could not cope with moving all my office stuff in one go, with all the household goods. Literally beyond my strength, I found. I am returning to Finchley one day next week to collect left-over files. M. Joseph is there, still wrapped up in Hutchinson's brown paper. I was looking at it the other day, intending to return it to you before removal, but time ran out. I am slightly worried because I don't remember any maps being incorporated in the manuscript. Was there a set of maps with each copy? I simply have no memory of them, but this could be that my mind has had too much to cope with recently to remember past data clearly. I have bought a small modern dolls-house at the back of a small estate with farmland behind the garden fence. Have an upstairs study overlooking this view. Nice walks in Blenheim Park. Hope you one fact took me 1/2 day, and will visit. I spent one day in Haslemere, and will visit. I spent one day in Haslemere, and will visit. I spent one day in Haslemere, and will visit.
